FASHION'S FANCIES.

JOU THE COOL AUTUMN DAYS.

Clothes for the Ladies--Tailor-Made JACKETS and New Netmarket Coat--Tailor Boxes of Cloth, etc.

Brown. In its current issue, says: "A tailor-made jacket of cloth is the wrap prepared for the first cool autumn days, and will be worn alike by old and young ladies. This jacket has the sides of the suit with which it is worn, and is the appropriate for wearing with various dresses. The English jacket is commanded by fashionable tailors for this purpose, which has for its distinguishing feature a double-breasted front with two rows of buttons, and a notched collar that laps toward the left side and shaped precisely like the collar of a man's French Albert jacket. There is a seam down the middle of the front, and the coat is added; a part is in each front, and the coat may be cut away from the waist line or hang straight below; the back has one side form each side, with some fully-preserved pleats in the middle seam; the garment is fastened at the waist with a belt all around. The pockets are slits in the side, and may be diagonal, curved, or straight. When made as a separate jacket to wear with any dress, rough cloths are used, such as tweed, corduroy, or flannel, frieze wool, cloth, so fine that it seems of silk texture; these rough clothes are as warm as fur, and need only a lining of silk or satin, and are worn entirely without trimming. Such cloths are made in Egyptian brown, dark English blue, plumb, stone gray, and dahlia colors. When made as a part of a suit, the material is plain broadcloth, or the new mixed colors is smooth broadcloth, that will not crease, and the lining is made of golden brown or red threads, or those woven in corkscrew patterns, with other rough English cloths used for traveling suits.

IMPORTED FRENCH JACKETS.

The French jackets differ from those just described in being only partly fitted to the figure, in what is called three-quarter fitted garments. The front hangs loose and straight (without drapery), and are double-breasted by three seams and side-seams, and is held in place by a belt underneath. French moleskines use fancy cloths for these extra jackets, and finish them with a velvet collar. The front is belt cost, velvet, etc., and pocket flaps are made for ornament, if desired, three or four rows of wide band straight across the lower part of the garment. These come in pigeon-gray rough cloth, in Gordon blue, maroon, brown, etc., and are very easy and jaunty-looking.

LONG NEWMARKET COATS.

The long Newmarket coat will be used again for walking, traveling, etc., and are liked because they do readily transform a house to street into a street suit, as they are long enough to be draped over the shoulders. Broad cloths are used for them in brown, pigeon gray, blue, or maroon, and it is noticeable that few black cloth wraps are shown, except for those wearing morning coats, tufted, frise, or plain dress suits, the latter in particular figures as used for these garments, with also some checked and striped cloths, but those of a plain cloth of some stylish color are less striking, therefore preferable. The coat may be:

New York Times

The sidewalk of Broadway in the eastern district of Brooklyn were crowded Thursday afternoon with shoppers and peddlers, most of them ladies and children, and the effect of a box-seat down each side of the front by a fold being stitched there the entire length of the coat or else it may be double-breasted as far as the waist, and open down the skirt. All these movements are made much fuller in the skirt with the view of wearing them over full tournaments and other dress skirts; for this purpose the extra width is placed in the three seams of the back; the coat sleeves are now usually closed unless it is to be trimmed its whole length with braid or fur.

Other long cloaks are made with loose folds, and are very popular for the popular last winter. Some of these are cut off on the turniture, and the fulness is added in six or eight organ pleats, which are round, and are used to give a full touriture, and are often made with the trimmings for these garments, while braid of various kinds, especially the fringed-out narrow braid, and the wide Herend braids that form a frame to the jacket, are used for trimming the short jackets. Knit-braiding is a favorite cloth of a second of its elasticity, and is used for both short and long coats. The braiding that promises to be most popular is easily done, and requires no more than a few points above and fringe below by placing lengthwise adjacent rows of narrow moiré braid on its edges, not flat. A three-inch border of this kind, with a fourth-inch added to it, will make a coat five inches wide, and a style of ample trimming for cloth jackets, jerseys, and for the basques of cloth or other heavy woollen-soups. The standing collar and cuffs are similarly braided, and there may be a vest similarly braided.

SHORT DRESSY MANTLES.

Short mantles of brocade cloth will be worn for early autumn, and velvet mantles trimmed with fur will be the dressy wrap for winter. These are regular mantles, reaching just below the waist in the back, lapping in a short square like a sleeve on the side, and the front is made of a cloth not very full, and with long, slender, square mantilla fronts. There are two middle forms behind, fitting the figure, and held close to the waist by a ribbon belt under the bust. They are fitted to the three back and front, and the sides and front quite free. These come in smooth broadcloth in the light minkes and mushroom shades, in pigeon gray, golden brown, rather bright red, and yellowish. Egyptian red-brown colors, and are some times made up with embroidery in odd striped designs, while others have merely a border of braid in many close rows, or in a sort of chain pattern. In bright colors, ravelled in a fringe on the edge.

Von Hofstot Blaine.

Evening Post.

Dr. H. Von Hofstot, the author of the Constitutional History of the United States, has a long article in the Baratine on our presidential candidates. After giving a full account of the political commotion he goes on to say:

"On the other side it is only the hand of demagogues and the broad-and-bitter politicians of all degrees of abjection (that in the highest degree) that properly can and must wish for Blaine's triumph. A man who has been told by Quantrell that he was in the act of drawing his revolver, said to him: 'I am a man of honor, and I have no time to waste with you.' He then got out his club and struck and kicked him until he bolted into a grocery-store. The proprietor saw the animal coming and jumped upon the counter, while others followed him down, and he was soon at the door with the assist of many others. The dog dove in between a mass-of-barred and a pile of soap-boxes and lay close amidst the wall, panting and snapping. The police officer closed the doors of the store, and, leaving the gunsmiths, proceeded to demand the keys of his jailer, and he permitted more favors than any other prisoner; in fact, acting a sort of assistant jailer. He was pardoned in ISM by the Governor on condition that he would leave the State and never return.

Mr. Quantrell, who had been captured by the police, was brought before the court-martial, and was condemned to death. His wife, who was in prison, was tried for aiding and abetting her husband, and was sentenced to life imprisonment.

He was sent to the penitentiary, where he died in 1864. He was still a young-looking man, but he had been connected with the police department of that city for four years."

On the Outlook.

Philadelphia Press.

Even during the time he was committing some horrid atrocities, Mr. Quantrell was, however, the possessor of a host and a number of men who had witnessed his acts, and who had been accustomed to him on his travels.

This is the reason why he was not condemned to death, but was given a life sentence instead of a death sentence.

He was born in 1820, and he did not commit any other crime than that of being a murderer.

He was tried for the murder of his wife, and was condemned to death. His wife, who was a widow, was tried for aiding and abetting her husband, and was sentenced to life imprisonment.
